Farm Journal Broadcast Personalities Win Notable NAFB Awards

South Bend, Ind., (November 19, 2018) — Farm Journal Broadcast talent were honored at the 2019 National Association of Farm Broadcasters (NAFB) annual meeting held last week in Kansas City, Mo. Tyne Morgan, host of the nationally syndicated “U.S. Farm Report” television program, was named winner of the prestigious Doan Award. Sponsored by AgriPulse, this award recognizes and encourages excellence in agricultural reporting.

“Tyne is a tenacious reporter who works tirelessly to serve our national audience of nearly half a million weekly viewers,” said Brian Conrady, Executive Vice President of Farm Journal Broadcast. “This honor recognizes her terrific reporting skills and the talented team of producers who carry on a television tradition now more than four decades strong.”

A graduate of the University of Missouri, Morgan has been with Farm Journal Broadcast since 2012 and has served as host of “U.S. Farm Report” since 2014.

Also earning recognition at the NAFB Convention was Andrew McCrea, host of the nationally syndicated radio program “American Countryside.” McCrea won top honors in the feature award category for his report on an Alabama sugarcane farmer with a passion for making the perfect syrup.

“Andrew is the consummate storyteller,” stated John Herath, News Director for Farm Journal Media. “We like to refer to ‘American Countryside’ as a daily dose of what’s good in rural America, and he never fails to deliver.”

McCrea has traveled the nation producing “American Countryside” since 1996. Today the program can be heard on more than 80 stations coast-to-coast along with two daily airings on SiriusXM Rural Radio.

About Farm Journal Media (farmjournalmedia.com)
